

Hall to rige.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Essay on Abraham Lincoln, which appears in this holi lay number of the Gleaner, has been ted by Col. Hicks, formerly of the United States, but now a citizen of Jamaica. He writes from recollection of President Lincoln, and of the political and military struggle between the nd Souh, in which he bore a part."—From the Kingston, Jam view, Gleaner, Jamury 1, 1870.

PRINTED BY THE EDUCATIONAL SUPPLY COMPANY,

---:0:

KINGSTON, JAMAICA.

S. Annual of the state of the s

Abrabam Lincoln.

INOTE. -For the facts stated in the following Essay, beyond what is matter of personal results from I am indebted to the following authorities: Story on the Constitution, Young's American Statesman, Mrs. Stowe's Men of our Time, and American Diplomatic Correspondence, 1865.1

Since the time of Washington and Franklin there has arisen no American so fully entitled to be numbered with them in the list of the world's great worthies as Abraham Lincoln. His is a name, not for "an age but for all time,"- not for one nation but for all peoples; and it is well to recall his memory and review his work, and consider those distinctive traits of character which made him the great man he was.

A man really is what he is; we can know him, chiefly, by what he does, and his manner of doing it. What Lincoln had to do was the righting of a great wrong—the saving of a great nation by the removal of a great evil that was destroving the nation. To understand his work it is necessary to understand the nature of this evil, the conditions of its existence, and the difficulties attending its removal. The brief historical outline which follows will, therefore, be of use. I can youch for it as correct in the general, though many minor and qualifying particulars are of necessity omitted.

SLAVERY IN THE UNITED STATES.

In 1781 thirteen American colonies government; and in 1787 the Ordinance accept it as a divine and very benevoproposed by Mr. Jefferson, of Virginia, to exclude slavery forever from these territories, was passed, having received the entire southern vote. Soon after this the Constitution was adopted to form "a more perfect union," and this Constitution contained a provision for the suppression of the African Slave trade. Through the action of their several State Legislatures the northern states were, in time, freed from slavery: and it was the general hope and expectation, entertained by the best and most eminent men of the South as well as of the North, that all the states would, by gradual steps, and without protracted delay, become wholly free, In the churches, at that time, slavery was generally tolerated only as a recognized evil, which must be put away.

But man's love of dominion over his fellow-man grows with its exercise; and the South made little effort to get rid of its "peculiar institution," while its disposition to do so grew less and less as the years went on. Then came Whitney's invention of the cottongin, opening to the South new sources of vast wealth by means of slave labour an invention resulting in the increase of cotton production from half a million pounds to forty million pounds annualwere united in a "Confederation." In ly. A very perceptible change of tone every colony, excepting Massachusetts. with regard to slavery was soon noted, slavery existed. Some of these colonies especially in the southern pulpit. Minhad immense territories in the North- isters began to find Biblical anthority west which they ceded to the general for it, and the people were not loatly to lent arrangement. When more terri- brethren.* The agitation however, was tory was acquired, the South gained not suppressed and was intensest in the the first of many political victories; for churches, resulting in dividing asunder while slavery was, indeed, prohibited north of a certain line, the portion south of that line was left without restrictive conditions, and of that the slaveholders took possession. It should be mentioned here that at an early period in the history of the nation South Carolina, the most aggressively proslavery of the southern states, proclaimed the doctrine that each State, whenever it deemed its rights violated, could at will withdraw from the Union, and set up an independent government of its own. In 1832 South Carolina made bold to defy the general government and to treat the national laws as "null and void." At that time, however, she had only the partial sympathy of the South, and her "nullification" movement failed.

Throughout the South there was a growing sense of the desirableness of slavery, a disposition to justify it rather than apologize for its existence, an intolerance of all local opposition, and an increasing irritability at any outside criticism, whether emanating from New England or Old England. North there was a marked division of public sentiment. The commercial interests of the North were becoming more and more closely connected with the institution of slavery; and in commercial circles the received creed was, Totton is King." While many in the North had a deepening conviction that slavery was iniquitous and dangerous to the commonwealth, and were resolved to agitate against it there was also, on the part of a large proportion of the roothern people, a desire and determination to suppress all discussion of the subject, as needlessly and uselessly irritating to their southern the leading church organizations each having its northern and southern section.

Meantime, the overflow of the populations of Europe was pouring into America, and the young nation, which Burke declared to be "still in the gristle, and not yet hardened into the bones of manhood," was making marvellous and unprecedented growth,very much greater, however, in the North than in the South. At this time the Slave States and Free States in the Union were equal in number, and it became a cherished axiom in the South that this equilibrium must be preserved. But the tide of emigration, flowing steadily in one direction, instinctively avoiding the Slave States, soon gave the North a decided preponderance in population, and the territories of the Northwest, rapidly filling up, were adding new and free States to the national constellation. This unequal growth was balanced for a time by the purchase and annexation of territory on the southern Forder, wherein slavery was already established, thereby adding Louisiana, Florida and Texas to the number of Slave States. But the steady growth of the North continued, and the equilibrium could not be maintained, In 1850 California was admitted into the Union as a free State, after a most prolonged and vehement contest, in the course of which many fears were expressed in the North, and many threats uttered in the South, of a dissolution of the Union. for by this time the South largely adopted by southern statesmen. straggling organization. In the North, All along, since 1820, the slavery quest three fourths or more of the ex-Whigs tion had been continually cropping up united with the Free-Soilers and about in Congress, causing exciting contro- one third of the Democratic party to versies; but in 1850 the battle raged form the Republican party, based upon more fiercely than ever before. The the principle of opposing the extension South strenuously resisted the admis- of slavery. The Democratic party resion of another free State, unless she tained its name, and a majority of its received some equivalent; and she membership in the North, gathering to finally accepted a most unrighteous itself the remnant of the Whig party, and odious Fugitive Slave Law as such and in the South had everything pretty

^{*}One of my earliest political recollections is that of a meeting convened in one of the northernmost States, to hear a Reverend gentleman lecture upom American Slavery, which meeting was violently dispersed by a mob of rowdies. the local peace officers refusing to interfere.

The "compromise of 1850" was ac- Douglas succeeded in his measure. equivalent. cepted by the two great political par- The Congressional restrictions were reties—Democratic and Whig—as a moved, and it was to be left with those "finality," not without protest, how- who should become residents of the ever, from the Anti-Slavery section of national territories to determine wheththe Whig party. Previous to this, a er or no slavery should be tolerated portion of the Democratic party, in the therein. The northern people immenorthern states, had separated from it, diately organized societies to send emiand were known as Free-Soilers. From grants to the territories, in order that '50 to '54 the odious features of the by their vote the introduction of slavery Fugitive Slave Law, the disturbances might be prevented; and the southern arising from attempts to enforce the people organized societies to send lication of Uncle Tom's Cabin, and introduce and establish slavery. When law in Boston and Cincinnatti, the pub-thither emigrants with their slaves to other incidents, served to keep the these northern and southern emigrants question of slavery before the people of met in the territories, violent collision the North as the dominant topic of dis- and bloodshed was the natural result. cussion. In 1854, the slavery question, The South found that the free state "finally settled" in 1850, was re-opened men in the territories would carry the in Congress by Senator Douglas of day; and then she took that step in ad-Illinois, who offered to the South the vance which proved the downfall of removal from the national territories of slavery. The southern people had all anti-slavery restrictions. Under been educated, by pulpit, press, and the Constitution, as it then was, (not platform, into the very acceptable belief as it now is) each State could determine (coinciding, as it did, with their wishes for itself the question of slavery within and their pecuniary interests in human its own limits; and the proposal was to chattels, valued at four thousand milgive the people of each territory the lions of dollars) that slavery was in itsame power. This measure was "the self right and beneficent; and they now beginning of the end." All preceding demanded that slavery should be adcontests were mild and placid compared mitted as of right and protected in with that which now convulsed the na- every national territory, and they de-There was a general re-adjust- clased that any legislation, national or ment of political parties. The northern territorial, treating slavery as a wrong, wing of the Whig party disbanded, and and seeking to restrain it, would be an zens; and they also declared that when- ges of his fellow citizens placed him at ever there was such infringement, the the head of the Republic? A mechanic. ties binding them to the Union would Charged with the government of one of be dissolved. This advanced position the greatest nations in the world, in a of the South, together with John crisis the most terrible in its history. Brown's effort to end slavery at once the ex-mechanic showed himself equal strike for their own freedom, added lantic misconception or half-conception fresh fuel to a fire that was already at of him is wholly excusable when we white heat. Douglas and his followers remember that in New York City a refused to accede to the southern de-leading member of the Athenæum Club. mand, and, in consequence, in the who sought to do honor to Lincoln's eventful Presidential election of 1860, memory enlogized him as "this untried the Democratic party was split in twain lawyer of a western village." It is a upon this issue.

Carolina nullification doctrines were its southern wing kept up but a feeble, much its own way.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

npon

speak of Lincoln as though he were a be chosen by the people as their Presi- to perform. dent, and then, unaccountably to everybody, proved himself to be fitted for a would have failed. Some English news-infringement upon their rights as citi- "What was Lincoln before the suffraarousing the southern slaves to to the situation." But any transattempting way of excusing one's own In that election three propositions for littleness to ascribe the greatness of disposing of the slavery question were others to chance. We are all charmed submitted to the people: -1. National (and harmed) by the fairy tales, where protection of slavery in the territories; some rustic young hero, without special 2. National indifference to slavery in preparation or any training, by sheer the territories; 3. National prohibition good luck and the favouring genius of of slavery in the territorics. The South some kind fairy, surmounts all difficulproposed the first, the northern wing of ties, subdnes all foes, and overthrows the Democratic party the second, and in combat the ablest and most expethe Republican party the third. For its rienced veterans. In real life these standard-bearer upon this issue, and things don't happen. I grant you, the its candidate for the office of President, revelation of greatness may be the the Republican party fixed its choice matter of a moment; but greatness is attained only by long-continued, persistent, laborious effort. We shall quite It has been rather the fashion to miss the lesson of Lincoln's life if we fall into the delusion that he had not. "happy accident," one who, by the by education, by training, by discipline. merest fortuitous chance, happened to faily fitted himself for the task he had

EDUCATION AND TRAINING.

Lincoln was educated. What is the post in which almost any other man test of education? "We have, "says Pascal," three principal objects in the papers spoke of him as a man who "for study of truth, one to discover it when the most part of his life had followed we see it, another to demonstrate it manual employments." The Revue when we possess it, and the third and des Deux Mondes said: "Mr. Lincoln last to discriminate it from the false was not one of those men who bring when we examine it." By what means to the power with which they are in- soever a man reaches the result, he has vested a force and brilliancy acquired an educated mird if he has obtained beforehand." And the Paris Siecle: this power of vision, power of demon-

If devoting the choicest years of one's and he was a diligent student of the boyhood to the making of Latin verses universal book of all Americans, the educates a man to this, well and good; newspaper of the day. One might have vet only shallow-pated fools will insist sought far and long before finding mathat a course of Latin verse-making is terial which would have better served the only means whereby one may be- in laying a foundation for Lincoln's come thus educated. Pre-eminently education. The Bible gave him his Lincoln did possess the power of vision moral creed—the Golden Rule—and -seeing clearly (not accidentally largely contributed to form his style of stumbling into) the true course to pur-speech; Shakespeare enlarged his sue: power of demonstration—causing views of life and humanity; from others to see the same thing, (making Æsop and Pilgrim's Progress he learndue allowance for moral strabismus ed the rare secret of making the greatand color-blindness); and power of est truths plain to the simplest minds: discrimination—with rarest sagacity the lives of Washington, Franklin and any false lights.

an educated man. His mother taught the newspapers of all him to read and write. He had six and all shades of opinion (for he months' schooling. While he was a read all) put him in close sympathy young man he read the best books, with his own age and country, and There are two books in the world—the made him familiarly acquainted with Bible and Shakespeare. With these he the conflicting interests, passions, prewas something more than familiar; he judices, hopes and aims of the people could repeat large portions of Shake- who were to be his helpers or antagospeare, and the Bible became so in- nists in life's battle. grained in his mind that its influence Lincoln was born into the ranks of can be traced in every one of his workingmen. For his first score of speeches and state papers. Besides years he had a workingman's expethese two books, what is a third? If rience,—swinging the woodman's axe. Luther answer for us, it will be that ploughing the prairies, boating on the book which was a special favourite Mississippi,—an experience not withwith Lincoln-Æsop's Fables; for Lu- out value in contributing its share in ther ranked Æsop next to the Bible, the training that fitted him to guide For a fourth book we have, by common the destinies of a nation whose ruling consent, Plutarch's Lives. In lieu classes consisted, chiefly of workingthereof, and serving much the same men. When the surveyor of his counpurpose, Lincoln read the Life of ty fell sick, he applied to Lincoln to Washington—a book frequently men- carry on his work. Lincoln took his tioned by him as having greatly in- tools and his books, mastered his craft. fluenced his own life. He had also the and did the work. In the time of the Life of Franklin and the Life of Henry Black Hawk Indian war Lincoln vol-Clay, the favourite political leader of unteered with others to form a comhis early manhood. These six books, pany of soldiers, and they chose him to together with the best extant commen- be their Captain. He studied law. He tary on the Bible—the Pilgrim's Pro- became a "village lawyer," but soon stration, and power of discrimination. gress—he read over and over againavoiding being misled by the glare of Clay gave inspiration and hope, stimulus to self-exertion, and faith in the Lincoln entered upon the Presidency possibilities of his own powers; and was in request beyond his village lim- throughout the State, agitation was its, and when that new State of Illi- universal; for even the few who did nois had grown to be the fourth State not agitate for or against slavery, agiin the Union, Lincoln had grown to be tated against agitation. the first lawyer in the State. He was twenty-five years of age when his and turmoil, the disintegration of old neighbours sent him to the State Legislature, and he was kept there as long harmonize heterogeneous elements in as he would consent to serve them, new combinations. It was a time of This gave him eight years' experience intense feeling and feverish excitement. as a legislator, and established his with not a little of untempered zeal. position as the recognised political while a multitude of counsellors were leader of his party in Illinois. Four filling the air with their Babel of conyears thereafter he was sent to Wash- fusing voices. It was a time that callington, serving as member of Congress ed for the exercise of those same qualifor the term of two years, when he de- ties which enabled Lincoln to lead the clined re-election.

State and National Capitals was, head, clear vision, conciliatory manner, doubtless, of much importance in the firmness for the right, and wise selectraining which prepared him for the tion of practicable means for maintaingreat work of his life; but of consider- ing the right, were largely instrumenably less importance than his unofficial tal in harmonizing discordant elements work, where he came in direct political and bringing order out of chaos. contact with the people. The battle of was his to curb the impatient, to refreedom had to be won in the hearts of strain the extravagant and visionary, the people before it could be won in to tone down excess of zeal, to convince legislative hall or on the crimson field the doubtful, to encourage the fearful, of war; and in no State was the politi- to embolden the timid, to find what cal battle waged more strenuously than would attract and unite all and repel in his own State of Illinois. Vermont, none. He saw clearly the one princifar to the northward, and South Caro- ple of right upon which all must stand lina, far to the southward, were States to make success worth striving for, and wherein political feeling was as in- the one practicable measure of state tense as elsewhere, but there was no policy upon which all must unite to exciting discussion. In Vermont the make success possible. He would not. opponents of slavery, and in South for the sake of success, compromise Carolina the advocates of slavery, had away what was vital and essential; things all their own way. Illinois was nor would be, to gratify excited feeling, a border State; in the upper portion the burden his cause with what was un-New England element predominated, timely, unnecessary, or overwrought. in the lower portion the Southern The service he rendered the cause of element, and in the middle por-freedom at this juncture was of the tion the two elements were about highest value; for, first of all, it was distributed. the contest against duce greater excitement or fiercer sential and what was practicable. This discussion. From 1854, for six years, seemingly simple service required rare

It was a time of political ferment political parties and the attempt to people successfully through all the dis-His legislative experience in the tracting years of war; and his cool Nowhere did needful that the people should have slavery pro- clearly defined to them what was esPlato says, "He who can properly de- too little and talk too much." At these fine and divide is to be considered a The ability Lincoln here manifested was not of sudden acquisition. All through life, as Lawyer and as Statesman, he had rigidly schooled himself until he had acquired the power-so very seldom seen-of stating his own case without overstating it, and without understating that of his adver-

sarv. In Northern Illinois, where the Anti-Slavery feelingwas most fervid, the people were accustomed to gather in monster mass meetings, by the fifty or hundred thousand, and with their processions, their music and flags and banners, to make grand political demonstrations. On such occasions they desired of a speaker nothing but that he should partake of and minister to the excitement of the people, and be but an eloquent echo of their own feelings. Few men could withstand the excitation of such a scene and the impulse to say what would be most acceptable to the multitude. In his "English Note-Books" Hawthorne has told us how almost impossible it is not to yield to the influence of the moment, and say what the audience desire to have said, in order to "produce an effect on the instant;" and he does not "quite see how an honest man can be a good orator." Of all the prominent Anti-Slavery leaders in the North, Lincoln seems to have been the only one who was not, at some time or other, borne off his legs by his enthusiastic audience, and betrayed into foolish and extravagant declarations. It is true of Lincoln—of how few men is it true?--that he did not go in speech where he had not already gone in thought. This would have marked him for a superior man anywhere, at any time; especially so, therefore at a time when there were vociferating mulability. So rare is such power that titudes of men of that class wno "think immense popular demonstrations. where the most exaggerated expression was apt to receive the londest anplause, Lincoln's utterances, somehow. seemed tame and disappointing. There was a certain craving for sensitional statement and for unqualified denunciation of all opponents: and Lincoln had nothing of the sort to give them. But when he met the people in their town halls, and would have before him a thousand auditors in a mood to listen calmly, he would quietly talk over the state of the nation with them, and present his points in that plain, selfevident way which, while not unduly exciting the feelings, would thoroughly convince the judgment. His political speeches were the most persuasive I ever heard. He was one of the few men whose speeches made votes. "How forcible are right words," was the mental comment while listening to him.

Lincoln verifies the German saving. that "clear thinking makes clear speaking." His manner of speech is most admirable. It is a trial to one's temper to find many good-natured. weak-sighted critics apologizing for Lincoln's style. Let them note the for it is noteworthy and it is a that this man of the West, anding for himself such means and methods of culture as he could, had formed a style remarkably akin to that of Emerson, the man of highest culture in the East facile princeps among the literary men of America. The style of each is plain, simple, direct, devoid of ornament, the force of what is uttered depending upon the thought itself and not upon any artificial collocation of sonorous polysyllables. Both exemplify the fact that the weightiest thoughts are best expressed in simplest words. Those who insist upon the special force guage may cite many illustrations from at Gettysburg, following Edward Ev-Lincoln. One of his most powerful everett's eloquent two hours' oration speeches was that at Springfield, open- (which Everett would gladly have exing the important contest of 1858; and changed for Lincoln's twenty lines) in it abounds in terse, short Saxon words, which speech occurs the oft-quoted It opens: "If we could first know sentence where Lincoln expresses the where we are and whither we are hope that "Government of the people. tending we could better judge what to for the people, by the people, may not do and how to do it." Lincoln adds: perish from the Earth." not stand. I believe the government tle in Illinois which substantially decannot endure permanently half slave termined the nature and the result of and half free. It will become all one the national contest of 1860. ponents of slavery will arrest the far-leader of the Democratic party, in sevther spread of it, and place it where the eral joint debates, where the questions public mind shall rest in the belief that at issue were discussed before the peodoubtful. We shall not fail; if we lished throughout the land; and the stand firm we shall not fail. Wise final outcome was that the Republiso far as we can prevent its growing Presidency. any larger, and so deal with it that in The processes of education are vathe run of time there may be some rious. Let a man be concerned in pubpromise of an end to it." Selden's lic affairs for some thirty years in a aphorism. "Syllables govern the place where all institutions are fixed able utterances, such as his Spring that arise are determined by routine of the short Saxon words of the lan-tory); and his brief two minutes' speech

"A house divided against itself can- In 1858 was fought the political batthing, or all the other. Either the op- met Senator Douglas, the northern it is in the course of ultimate extinc- ple. In these debates Douglas was tion; or its advocates will push it for- compelled to disclose just how far he ward till it shall become alike lawful in was willing to go in upholding slavery, all the States, old as well as new, while Lincoln clearly defined how far North as well as South.' After set- he believed he had the Constitutional ting forth "what to do and how to do right to go and intended to go in onnoit" he concludes: "The result is not sing slavery. The debates were pubcounsels may accelerate, or mistakes cans of the nation were attracted to the delay it, but sooner or later the victory support of Lincoln, chose him for their is sure to come." Elsewhere he says champion, and accepted his definitions of slavery: "Because we think it of their creed: while the South withwrong we propose a course of policy drew from Douglas, dividing asunder that shall deal with it as a wrong. We the Democratic party and making cerdeal with it as with any other wrong, in tain the election of Lincoln to the world," will occur to the reader of Lin- and deeply-rooted; where there is but coln. One cannot fail to notice how little of the exciting stir and conflict of large a proportion of one-syllabled humanity; where life runs quietly on words are found in his most memor- in well-worn ruts; where all questions field speech; his letter to Greeley; his and established custom; where for a second Inaugural (declared by the century one year is but the twin of Westminster Review to be the most re- every other year; -and he might, by markable. State paper known to his-diligent study of the records of the great conflicts of the past, so master the ed with his hands for a livelihood. problems that concern mankind as to and there was a time when he was a become a profoundly educated states-boy; but it was not as ex-boy, or exman. But let him be placed in a new, mechanic, or ex-village lawyer, that lustv. voung State like that of Illinois, the American people, in the very crisis not yet fully reclaimed from the grasp of of their great political struggle, seeking the red man, and all its institutions yet for the ablest and trustiest leadership, to receive definite form; where the fixed their choice upon Abraham Linstir and the rush and the whirl of life coln almost unprecedented; where every year leaves far behind the landmarks of the former year; where all questions are open questions, and nothing so fixed that it may not, upon discussion, be unfixed; where all the problems in religion, politics, education and jurisprudence come up anew for decision, and are to be decided with regard to principle rather than to precedent; where the elements that make up society are many and diverse and actively antagonistic;—let a man have, like Lincoln, thirty years of such experience, taking large part in moulding the growing institutions of the State, and (if he have the capacity to learn in such a school) it is he, disciplined by the actual conflict of life. rather than the one profoundly versed in the history and philosophy of human conflicts, who is best fitted to encounter any great and sudden crisis in human affairs where the problems for solution are alike new and difficult.

I have wholly failed in my purpose, if it has not been shown that Lincoln entered upon the Presidency an educated man, fairly trained and disciplined for his work; that whatever of "force and brilliancy" he manifested in that high office he had "acquired beforehand;" and that it is not quite an adequate description of such a man to designate him as an "ex-mechanic," or by this transparent honesty insisted as an "untried lawyer of a western village." True, there was a time when in America. No, it was not cunning: he had just entered upon the practice it was "the brave old wisdom of sinof law,—there was a time when he toil- cerity." He was one of those Personal Traits.

It was not alone his political wisdom and ability that won for him, and enabled him to retain, the confidence of the people. The whole man was attractive to them

Lincoln was honest and sincere. Truth was the basis of his chracater, as it must be the basis of any character that shall endure. He was wholly free from any taint of Machiavel's maxim, that "the credit and reputation of virtue are a help to man, but virtue itself a hindrance." His professed creed was his real creed. Long before he was named for the Presidency the people of Illinois had knighted him, giving him the title "Honest." It is frequently said, -

" An honest man's the noblest work of God," and it is generally believed that an honest lawyer is the rarest; yet it was as lawyer, no less than as politician, that the appellation was bestowed. His colleagues at the bar used to say of him that he was "perversely honest." Diplomatists, accustomed to intricate, labyrinthine policies and "wheels within wheels," were at a loss what to make of such a man. His simple straightforward utterances were, to them, insoluble enigmas. One who was finding himself continually baffled that Lincoln was the most cunning man " Whose armour is his honest thought, And simple truth his utmost skill."

The people's trust in Lincoln's honesty was never shaken. That anchor held. when so many other anchors seemed to give way.

His heart was Lincoln was kind. tender as a woman's. He was habitually considerate of others, and was gentle alike in word and deed. Throughout his life-long struggle in opposition to slavery, with all his earnestness and zeal he had no unkind taunts, no bitter invective, no vituperation to pour forth upon the people of the South. "Sweetness and light" characterized his speech. Yet he was not wanting in feelings of deep indignation; and those feelings were never more fully aroused than by the recital of the privations endured by Union soldiers in Andersonville prison. Still, when he was vehemently urged to retaliate, he refused, men like that."

career, vaunted, -"1 propose and 1 dispose, also."

ereed, firmly. his public and political life in Illinois the large, free, new, developing West he maintained, without wavering, his fundamental political principles, that slavery was a wrong and that there was a constitutional method which could be adopted and should be adopted to deal with it as a wrong. His was not a vacillating mind. In doubtful matters he deliberated carefully and long, sadly trying the patience of impatient men, before (to use his own phrase) he "put his foot down;" but when once it was put down it seemed almost immovable. It was, indeed put down so quietly, with such entire absence of demonstration an! blaster. that few could realize how firmly Lincoln held it there until they sought to move it. In a remarkable degree he exemplified the saying of Demosthenes: "The beginning of virtue is consultation and deliberation; the perfection of it, constancy." His firmness was nowhere more conspicuous than saving. "I can never, never starve in retaining and sustaining his military and civil officers against the Lincoln was unassuming before men clamour of detraction which would and humble before God. He did not arise in the tempestuous hours of peril depreciate himself, but he failed not to and disaster. Had his firmness not appreciate others. He was free from been of the highest quality, early in the self-conceit. He held his mind open to war Grant and Sherman would have suggestions from every side. He re- been dismissed from the army, and durceived all frankly, listened to all kindly ing the war Seward and Chase disand patiently, and judged all candidly, carded from the Cabinet. The combi-He was reverent and humble before nation of this firmness with Lincoln's Almighty God. He recognized a pow- other qualities has been forcibly stated er, higher than his own, fashioning by Motley: "So much firmness with events beyond man's control. He ac- such gentleness of heart, so much logiknowledged that "Man proposes, but calacuteness with such almost child-God disposes." "I confess plainly," he like simplicity and ingenuousness of said, "that I have not controlled nature, so much candor to weigh the events, but events have controlled me." wisdom of others with so much tenac-He had nothing of the imperious spirit ity to retain his own judgment, were of Napoleon who, in the midst of his rarely before united in one individual."

Lincoln was a true gentleman. Some of the external signs of what is gentle-Lincoln was firm. He held to his manly will differ with differing coun-For the thirty years of tries and ages; and it happened that in conventional the developed more fully Lincoln assumed the Presidency, it so cynical a critic as Horace Walnole was discovered that his manners had a would allow. "A careless song," he Western flavor; and dilettanti critics says, "with a little nonsense in it, now were horrified to find that the new and then, does not misbecome a mon-President was not careful to conform, arch." And the historian. Motley. in all particulars, to "that mere system speaking of the apparent gaiety of Wilof etiquette and conventionalisms in liam the Silent in the darkest hours of which small minds find their very his country's trials, says that those being; "* and he was set down as "a who censured this gaiety were "dulraw, rough, unsophisticated" boor. Yet, lards who could not comprehend its in all the essential qualities, and in all the higher and finer qualities which constitute the true gentleman, Lincoln was the peer of any man he ever met. One pregnant fact, in illustration, will suffice: Frederick Douglass says that Lincoln is the only man of note in America, with whom he has had an hour's conversation, who did not in the course of the hour, somehow, in some way or other, remind him that he was of a different race.

HIS HUMOUR.

Prominence must be given to Lincoln's humour; for it was one of the most prominent, and I think not the least valuable, of his characteristic traits. Humour enters into the makeup of the complete man. It is one of elements of human greatness; without it, something would be lacking. So it was justly held by Socrates that the great poet should be great in comedy no less than in tragedy, -that his greatness should comprehend all sides of human life. It is only your men of inferior grade who deride humour. Such were the French literary critics in the Voltairean age, who regarded Shakespeare simply as a "buffoon"; and such were the small politicians who made that same word

Perhaps we are all disposed to underestimate the value of Lincoln's exuberant humour; to regard it rather as a defect.—as something detracting from his greatness,—as, in some way, lowering him from the sublime height which, we imagine, every great man should occupy. To conceive of a man as great, it seems necessary to keep him, somehow, at a great distance. Where and tiquity intervenes, distance in time aids our conception, and the humour of the great man does not belittle him in our estimation, as instance Socrates Luther, Sir Thomas More, William of Orange, Franklin, But. ordinarily, humour brings a man close to us, and, to some extent, tends to destroy the sense of greatness. He that laughs with me puts himself, in a manner, on my own level. "Yo man is a hero to his valet," that is, to one who knows him in undress; and humour is the undress of the mind. Undoubtedly this humour of Lincoln did preclude such feelings of profound veneration as would arise from a sense of awiul greatness and solitary grandeur; but what he lost in veneration he more than gained in love. This love was of value inestimable. The whole question of success or failure in the great contest depended upon whether or no Lincoln usages of so-"buffoon" express their entire comprediffered in very many mi- hension of Lincoln. That humour is particulars from those of the not incompatible with loftiness of po-East. When sition and greatness of character even philosophy."

^{*}Frederick Robertson.

could keep the people with him, and all along, the people, finding that Lincoln did not hold himself aloof from them, steadfastly clung to him, even when the politicians were ready to desert him. I cannot doubt that his gentle, quiet, wise humour had no small influence in keeping him on good terms with the people.

Humour is both spear and shield. With Lincoln, before he became President, it was as the spear of Ithuriel. unmasking subtle fallacies at a touch. After he became President it was his shield. He interposed it for protection against the intermeddlers who felt a call to dictate the manner of governing the nation. Not even Cromwell was so worried with the dictatorial advisings of those Puritan Ironsides of his, who proved so troublesome to his enemies in war and to himself in peace. Lincoln was not laggard in acknowledging the immense importance of the fact that the churches of the North were with him, that the religious conscience of the people was sustaining the Union armies; yet, at times, he must have felt that he was paying a large price for this support, in enduring so many delegations of ministerscoming singly, or in pairs, or by the dozen- who thought they had a divine commission to direct the President's course. To one group of ministers, especially positive in announcing just what measures God wished him to of incalculable worth, because of its adopt. Lincoln, gravely meditating medicinal, restful, recuperative properupon their message, answered slow-ties. The four wearisome years dragly:-"Well, gentlemen, it is not often ged heavily on; the weight of care and that one is favoured with a delegation di- of woe resting upon him could hardly rect from the Almighty." His Emancipa- be upborne; there were times when, as tion Proclamation was delayed, wisely disasters came thick and fast, sleep and necessarily, until the right moment fled from him, and he would exclaim, came. To wait, to bide the time of its "If there is a man out of hell that coming, was a difficult task; for few suffers more than I do, I pity him." possess the gift of patience,—few can Without such aid as humour gave him realze that

"To wait may be to do: Waiting won a Waterloo!"

A minister, one of his most impatient friends, was urging Lincoln to immediate action. "Why not issue it at once?" "I have no right, until it becomes a military necessity; and it isn't that yet." Why must you wait? Just call it a military necessity, and that will do." "Oh, said Lincoln. "that would do, would it? Please excuse a very simple question; but.—How many legs would a sheep have, calling the tail one?" "Why, five, of course." "Oh. no; it would only have four. Calling the tail a leg does not make it a leg." The minister took his leave to ponder over his new lesson in political ethics. He was not the only one who left Lincoln's presence all the wiser for an interview with him. A large delegation from some clerical body visited him to give him cheer and sympathy: and one of the ministers said,—'Well. we have one great blessing; I believe that the Lord is on our side." "Yes." replied Lincoln, "but there is something more important than that." "I beg your pardon, Mr. President; but perhaps you misunderstood my remark. I said that I believe the Lord is on our sice. "Yes; but that is not the most important thing." "Why, what can be more important than that?" "That we should be on the Lord's side."

To Lincoln, personally, humour was -restoring elasticity to the mind, renerves, giving occasional brief respite coln was to put down that rebellion. to well-nigh exhausted powers, I do As President he had his skilful military not see how Lincoln could have en- officers, trained by the government. dured it all. Does this seem at all but he found that many of them were cal hour of the Reformation when Lu- to give him battle; he had a nave. rate account of a Congress of rooks, had forts and arsenals, but found that try: but it is a serious one and necessary to me in order to repulse the thoughts which overwhelm me."*

LINCOLN AS PRESIDENT.

It was well that Lincoln was a fullgrown man in the prime of his strength, when he entered upon his great office. He had need of all his resources. Everything was unsettled. The nation was drifting from its moorings. It was chaos come again. His Presidential oath—"to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution"-had given him a place whereon to stand, and there he stood firmly and calmly amidali the confusion; and when it was ascertained that threats would not intimidate him. that rebellion in word and in formal resolution would not move him, then rebellion in act followed, and Fort Sumter took its place in history.

lieving now and then the tension of the The task then devolving upon Linstrange? Think of Luther, at the time disregarding the orders of the Comof the Augsburg Conference the criti- mander-in-Chief, and were preparing ther felt that everything was at stake - but found national ships of war were busying himself with writing his elabobeing converted into rebel rams: he and adding "This is a mere pleasan- these were supplying strongholds and weapons to destroy the nation they were intended to defend. For a time, as Lincoln said, it was "impossible to tell whom to trust." At last, when all had taken position, it became manifest who were for the government, who wera against the government, and who were endeavouring to be or were pretending to be neutral.

> The North had greatly the preponderance in men and resources, and had it been united the contest would not have so wearily dragged its slow length along, but would have verified the prediction of a famous General who promised to make the war "short, sharp, and decisive," Indeed. there would have been no war. The Southerners never intended to pit their strength against the full strength of the North. Of course, they expected to do their part, (and they did it!) but they relied not a little upon foreign aid. of which they professed to be very confident, and very much upon divisions in the North, of which they were altogether certain.

> The possible complications with foreign powers was a danger to be avoided with delicate tact and eare, but it was the actual divisions in the North which made the task of Lincoln so extremely difficult. His supporters in the election were prepared to support him in the war, though many of them were anxious rather to destroy slavery

^{*}To me there is indescribable pathos in that touching scene in the Tower, between Sir Thomas More and his beloved daughter, Margaret. Each was to the other more than fondest lover, and each was overwhelmed with sorrow in thinking of the other's sorrow. At last, after a long and cruel separation the doomed man was permitted to have a brief interview with his daughter. When she entered his cell, they embraced and wept in silence, neither being capable of uttering a word. At length, as they gazed fondly one upon the other, Sir Thomas Moore said—" Why, Meg, you are getting freckled;" and Margaret adds in her Journal "Soe that made us bothe laugh.' What pathos is in the laughter which is but the repressed bubblings of tears of woe!

erable number who voted against Lin- valries, or intemperate zeal, or rash incoln were willing to sustain him as discretion, or arrogant presumption. President provided the war for the He took what seemed the best, and, Union was not made the pretext for a with all their weaknesses and foibles. war against slavery. The majority of made the best possible use of them, so these who voted against Lincoln, in long as they were usable at all. the North, were for peace at almost self-conceit seemed universal. Perhaps any price, and they persistently op- it was his own lack of it that fostered posed all measures looking to the vig- it in others. So quiet was he so unorous prosecution of the war; while pretending, displaying none of those some were seeking every opportunity "feahers of ostentation" without which to give positive aid to the South. This, Bacon says "the fame of learning then, was what Lincoln had to do: is slow," with no tone of imperiousness while steering clear of foreign compli- in his words, and with no air of concations, to so conduct the war as to descension in listening to the words of unite in efficient combat against the others, the officials at Washington South all the loyal elements of the were self-deceived in the President. North, and to keep the disloyal ele- Indeed, we are all the pitiful slaves of these dislocal elements were may be not duly labelled, or appear not in livinferred from the fact that at one time ery, how are we to know him? True. they took possession of New York City, they had Lincoln's speeches—of which days in defiance of the Government.*

could only have had the best conceiv- thoughts and strong in manly sense:" able men! But he must needs take but they were too enamoured with the such as he could find, who, often, were beauties of their own speeches to realize not such as he could wish. Love of the calm strength and rare sagacity of country, sense of right, loyalty to duty, the man who had uttered Lincoln's and were not wanting; yet, with these, not too much absorbed in the contemplaseldom was there a large admixture of tion of their own greatness to comprethan to preserve the nation. A consid- personal ambitions, jealousies and riquiescent. How formidable appearances. If the great man come by mob violence, and held it for three the Leeds Mercury has well said that they "are a photograph of his charac-In working out his task, if Lincoln ter, overflowing with self-conceit, or overweening pride, or hend his. Evidently it was a time that called for great men. In such a crisis, at such a momentous epoch, it were a thousand pities if some one did not rise to the height of the occasion; and since this undemonstrative man seemed to be doing nothing startling and astounding, each one of dozens of Generals and Statesmen began to feel that he was the man for the hour. General Fremont, in military command at the West, undertook the role of political dictator, and General McClellan, in military command at the East, that of political censor, tutor, and guide to the

^{*}In the third year of the war, the opposition candidate for Governor in the state of Ohio was Vallandingham, a bitter opponent of the war, and the most pronounced and obnoxious of the northern sympathizers with the South. Brough defeated him by 100,000 majority. I vividly recall the exultant jubilations of the army in front of the sonthern lines at Chattanooga when the result was made known; but I also remember that I was not so much impressed by the great majority Governor Brough hal received as with the significant and startling fact that 150,000 citizens in that one Northern State had, by voting for Vallandingham, declared, in effect, their sympathy with the South, and their wish to give up the contest.

President, while every one of his Cabin-state safely through its dangers, standtheir relative positions. He received and for sympathy and confidence and ancarefully; yet he had to say, -" In the time. The desired haven was evident end the decision must rest with me;" to all; and to many the one wise and and they all learned in time, somewhat essential thing was to keep up full slowly and reluctantly, that the decis- head of steam and push forward perion did rest with him.

ten thousand difficulties which con- from his course when he was but tinually beset the President, amid a tacking. hubbub of clamorous and distracting All along it was a "dim voices, censorious, distrustful, and dic-perilous way." tatorial. However, through it all Lin- every side head; and he kept his and the coln kept his and his man, though his faith in men often so shallow that again and again and failed. great in the great diversity of sentiment the keel upon the rocks. among those who supported his gov-Many of one class were hot. rash and impatient; many others, of another class, lukewarm, timid and hesitating. Lincoln could dispense with neither and he displeased both. 'At first he was so slow that he tired out all those who see no evidence of progress but in blowing up the engine; then he was so fast, that he took the breath away from those who think there is no safety while there is a spark of fire under the boilers."* Few, now, will withhold the meed of praise from that calm, patient, wondrously wise man, the true hearted, strong-hearted, clear-headed, coolheaded man, the man "of iron brow and heart of gold," who piloted the ship of et Ministers was quite willing to re- ing always firm and unmoved, uncomlieve Lincoln of the helm. In his own plainingly receiving sneers and disquiet way he gave them to understand trust and censure where he had looked he sought, counsel and advice from all; proval. We praise the pilot, now; but he heard attentively and considered how greatly was he misjudged at the sistently at the highest pressure, hold-I feel how hopeless is the task to ing a rigid course, straight and direct condense into a few sentences the sub- for the point of destination. So they stance of a volume-to-depict the em-thought Lincoln heedless and supine barassments, perplexities, trials, disap- when he was but waiting for the dense pointments, misunderstandings, and the fog to lift, and that he was departing For it was not plain sailing. ΑH were threatening reefs. channel was not easily faith in found, and, when found, at times difficulty—lay again we seemed to hear the grating of

THE EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION.

The great fact of the Presidency of Abraham Lincoln is, his Emancipation Proclamation. Lincoln as President, in time of peace, would have had not the remotest pretence of authority for issuing it; as Commander-in-Chief, in time of war, he had authority; -that is, whenever, to secure success in war, it should become a military necessity, then it would be constitutionally lawful. So long as its effect would have been to completely divide the North, making rebellion successful and slavery perpetual, it was a military necessity not to issue it. The great majority of those who censured his slowness of movement acknowledge now that his delay was a wise delay, and that his cautious steps prelimin-nary to the final issuing of the Procla- authority, within constitutional lines. mation, were necessary to so effectual- as to limit and restrict slavery. ly consolidate public sentiment in sup- North believed and hoped, and the port of it, that it should not fail of its South believed and feared, that if this nurpose. Lincoln felt it to be sublime-policy were persisted in, slavery would ly right, though issued as a "war "in the run of time" cease to be. In measure;" and in the memorable con- electing Lincoln the Republican party cluding sentence of the Proclamation did not expect and did not intend the he places its righteousness in the fore- immediate extinction of slavery : it did front:

^{*}Lowell, in North American Review, 1864.

to be an act of justice, warranted by lost the political battle. which was the Constitution, upon military ne-fought solely upon the slavery quescessity. I invoke the considerate judg- tion, then tendered the gage of war. ment of mankind, and the gracious fa- The North could have avoided war in vor of Almighty God."

3.120,000 slaves within the lines of the the South could have formed a nation rebellion, and by an Amendment to the wholly freed from slavery: or it could the supporters of Lincoln affecting war, by surrendering the fruits of its 830,000 other slaves. America became political victory and withdrawing all free America, and, in consummating opposition to slavery. The North this sublimest event of the century, would do neither; and entered upon slavery than do Jefferson Davis and piness." John Brown was the provocation to the rebellion, stitutional methods.

expect and did intend the ultimate ex-"And upon this, sincerely believed tinction of slavery. The South having either one of two ways: it could have By this Proclamation, affecting given up the Union, and parting from Constitution proposed and carried by have saved the Union intact, without they who wrought the deed so shatter- the war with a two-fold purpose, that slavery throughout the the nation should continue to be a world that it must speedily fall, never nation, and so continue that in time more to rise and curse the Earth. The it might become a free nation. The fact that, with the war, slavery in election of Lincoln was the culminating America came to an end, is patent to point of a long contest extending over all; but with regard to the motives and many years. The war was a continupurposes, as touching slavery, of the ance of that contest—being, as Lincoln parties to the war, there is in many phrased it, an "appeal from the ballot minds a very hazy and confused idea, to the bullet." The creed of Lincoln, It is said: "In entering upon the the representative man of the North. war, Lincoln and the North did not in- was none other than that of John tend, while putting down the rebellion. Brown, whose creed was this: "I beto put an end to slavery at the same lieve in the Golden Rule and the Detime." True. It is also said: "There-claration of Independence," - the latter fore Lincoln and his adherents deserve phrase meaning the right of every man no more credit for the extinction of to "life, liberty and the pursuit of haphis adherents." Not true. The whole realize the creed at once, violently, by matter admits of simple statement in a slave insurrection; Lincoln, in the few words: The election of Lincoln course of time, by peaceable and con-Lincoln, and those whose votes elected made use of John Brown and Abraham him, purposed to so use the national Lincoln in accomplishing the destruction of slavery, but by a method not proposed by either. Lincoln yielded to the power higher than his own, and with trembling joy grasped the great opportunity God placed within his reach to effect in the present that which had been his great hope for the distant future. The purpose of the North, the purpose of the South, and the overruling power of God, are clearly and admirably set forth in Lincoln's second Inaugural address. I quote two or three paragraphs :-

"All knew that this interest (slavery) was some how the cause of the war. To strengthen perpetuate and extend this interest was the object for which the insurgents would rend the Union even by war, while the Government claimed no right to do more than to restrict the territorial enlargement of it.

Neither party expected for the war the magnitude or the duration which it has already attained. Neither anticipated that the cause of the conflict might cease with or even before the conflict itself should rease. Both looked for an easier triumph and a result less fundamental and astounding.

Both read the same Bible and pray to the same God, and each invoke His aid against the other. It may seem strange that any men should dare to ask a just. God's assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men's faces; but let us judge not, that we be not judged. The prayers of both could not be answered. That of neither has been answered fully. The Almighty has his own purposes. 'Wee unto the world. because of offences, for it must needs be that offences come; but wee to that man by whom the offence cometh. If we shall suppose that American slavery is one of these offences, which in the providence of God must needs come, but which, having continued through His appointed time, He now wills to remove, and that be gives to both North and South this terrible war as the woe due to those by whom the offence came, shall we discern therein any departure from those Divine attributes which the believers in a living God always ascribe to Him?

Fondly do we hope, lervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may soon pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondsman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid with another drawn with the sword. -as was said three thousand years ago, so, still, it must be said, - 'The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. "

ESTIMATE OF LICOLN.

As there seems to have been at one time in England a strange misconception of the great war, -even Carlyla putting it aside as but "the burning of a dirty chimney," so there was gross misconception of the character of Lincoln, as the columns of the Times and of Punch would testify. At the close of his career he began to be more truly comprehended and it was but the expression of the thought of very many when a prominent English Newspaper said that Lincoln "will live in the hearts and minds of the whole Anglo-Saxon race as one of the noblest examples of that race's highest qualities." And when all the clouds and mists that have obscured the man, or given distorted views of him, shall have passed away, some Englishman will arise to produce a portrait of Lincoln that shall endure, and find a place not lower than that of Washington or Franklin, In fiction Dickens has cleverly sketched. in his Elijah Pogram, a western politician, the littleness that often struts and swells in pointous garb and assumes a bombastic tone. It is left to a nobler pen than that of Dickens for does not Rafaelie rank ilogarth? to portray, in history, the greatness that appeared in almost rustic attire, modest and massuming, in the person of Lincoln, the western statesman.

How thoroughly English are many of the best things in his character. In steadfastness of purpose, in persistence of effort, in pluck, in standing firmly on his own legs, is he not what all Englishmen respect? In his subduedness of tone, in his freedom from all rant and bluster, in his words, that do not go beyoud his matured thought, and in his deeds that do not lag behind his uttered words, does he not appeal to what is best and most characteristic in English character? The first English Happy Warrior," has depicted the ideal only in Galilee. There alone do we Englishman. Read it; for there is not find - and we find in ineffable perfection a single trait that Wordsworth has de- -a prototype of patient endurance of lineated which is not exemplified in contunely without retaliation, and an bestow highest praise, they are wont to every feeling of revenge. For such quote the famous couplet wherein Sir gentleness with such power, for such John Denham likens, the noblest char- forbearance with such provocation, for acter to the river Thames:

Strong, without rage; without o'erflowing, full." To whom can these lines be applied with more complete appropriateness than to Lincoln? Punch was not in his best mood when he devoted himself to the caricature of such a man: but how grandly did Punch strive to make amends, when, along with all that is noblest and worthiest of earth, he took his place among the mourners over the murdered body of this great and good "Beside this corpse, that bears for winding-sheet The Stars and Stripes he lived to rear anew, Between the mourners at his head and feet, Say, scurril-jester, is there room for YOU?

" Yes, he had lived to shame me from my sneer, To lame my pencil and confute my pen: To make me own this hind of princes peer, This rail-splitter a true-born king of men.

" My shallow judgment I had learned to rue, Noting how to occasion's height he rose; How his quaint wit made home-truth seem more

How, iron-like, his temper grew by blows;

"How humble, yet how hopeful, he could be; How in good fortune and in ill the same; Not bitter in success, nor boastful he, Thirsty for gold, nor feverish for fame.

"He went about his work such work as few Ever had laid on head and heart and hand -As one who knows, where there's a task todo, Man's honest will must Heaven's good grace command."

poet of the century, in his poem "The plar not in England nor in America: Lincoln. When English critics would all-pervading charity that excludes such forgiveness for such wrongs, we "Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not shall not rest in our search through history until we have gone back some Eighteen Hundred years. The spirit of the man breathes in those golden words which form the fitting close of the remarkable utterances in his second Inaugural:

"With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right. let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's wounds. to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and orphans, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations."

In America the common people and the soldiery loved. Lincoln with a love unparalled in history. At Washington there was no lack of censure and adverse criticism, but with the people at large there was unshaken confidence. They found in Lincoln all that was best in themselves, and they trusted him who trusted them. And when he was stricken down, the blow fell upon millions of households, and the people mourned, each one as though he had lost his dearest, best beloved, most intimate friend. The world had learned to love Lincoln, too; and messages came across the Atlantic from many an English home and many an Alpine cottage, that the loss of America was felt to be the loss of mankind. The name But for some rare, peerless charac- and the fame of Lincoln is not for one teristics in Lincoln we seek his exem- country alone; for "he leaves," says

M. Prevost Paradol, the eminent French journalist, "to every one in the world to whom liberty and justice are dear, a great remembrance and a pure example." Still his countrymen claim that they find in him something pectliarly American; and this is nowhere so worthily expressed as in the noble lines of James Russell Lowell who, I think, will sometime be recognized as first of American poets:

"Forgive me if from present things I turn To speak what in my heart will beat and burn, And hang my wreath on his world-honoured urn.

Nature, they say, doth dote, And cannot make a man Save on some worn-out plan, Repeating us by rote:

For him her Old World moulds aside she threw, And choosing sweet clay from the breast Of the unexhausted West

With stuff untainted shaped a hero new, Wise, steadfast in the strength of God and true.

How beautiful to see Once more a shepherd of mankind, indeed, Who loved his charge, but never loved to lead; One whose meek flock the people joyed to be,

Not lured by any cheat of birth,
But by his clear-grained human worth.
They could not choose but trust
In that sure-footed mind's unfaltering skill,

And supple-tempered will

That bent like perfect steel to spring again and thrust.

Great captains, with their guns and drums,
Disturb our judgment for the hour;
But at last silence comes:
These all are gone, and, standing like a tower,
Our children shall behold his tame,
The kindly-earnest, brave, foreseeing man.
Sagacious, patient, dreading praise, not blame,
New birth of our new soil, the first American."

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By GEO. HICKS,

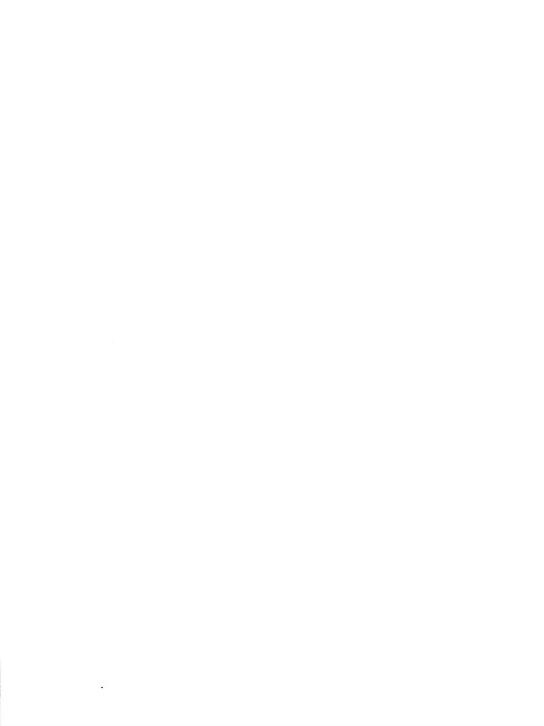

Late Major (Brevet Colonel) 96th Illinois, Vol. Infantry.

KINGSTON:

Printed at the Educational Supply Company, 16 King Street

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

0 011 839 399 5